

Production Spaces

The Little Country Theatre traditionally presents its productions in Askanase. This building houses two production spaces—Askanase Auditorium and the Walsh Studio Theatre. Show space is selected as appropriate to each individual production.

Askanase Auditorium is a proscenium stage (approximately 28' x 100') seating 388. The auditorium is used for general lecture courses in the mornings and is reserved for LCT use in the afternoons. Students are not generally allowed to use this space for performances, rehearsals, or classroom work.

The Walsh Studio Theatre is a flexible black box space (49' x 49') seating a maximum of 160. The studio serves as a major classroom space for the theatre arts department as well as a rehearsal space for the NDSU Musical Theatre Troupe. When not previously reserved, this space is available for student use. A sign-up sheet is posted weekly on the studio door. Students are asked to schedule only two hours per day to allow use by others.

In addition to the spaces housed in Askanase, the Theatre Department has access to both Festival Concert Hall and Beckwith Recital Hall located in the Music Education Building. These spaces are used for LCT productions on a limited basis as productions demand.
