

Rain for the Earth

Film (& Discussion with Prof. Tom Isern)

Rain for the Earth is a recently discovered documentary about the Dust Bowl of the 1930s. Little is known about this government film—no one knows who, specifically, made it—but content analysis reveals that (sshh, don't tell anyone) the film was shot in Slope County, North Dakota. The program includes a screening of the 15-minute film and a discussion of its portrayal of life on the northern plains. Students in Isern's HIST 104 or 381 classes: This program can be used as a make-up for one class day's attendance-participation points.
